Recognition and recall

Recognition identifies information when a cue is present.

Recall retrieves information without that cue.

Keep relevant interface choices visible to reduce memory demands.

A learner recognising a familiar paragraph has not yet shown recall.

Progressive disclosure

Progressive disclosure reveals secondary details when they are relevant.

Keep essential actions visible and label optional controls clearly.

Hiding essential navigation would make the interface harder to use.